MAKE NATURAL CONFETTI

Did you know you can make confetti from fallen petals and leaves?
A really simple craft and completely eco-friendly as it is biodegradable.

Whether it's to sprinkle at a wedding or just as part of a beautiful table decoration at home, you're making a conscious decision to go green and that's awesome!

What you will need:

- Lots of colourful leaves
- Hole punches – standard, heart, star hole punch - whatever you like! (heart and star hole punches are optional)

Benefits of natural confetti...

The most important benefit of making biodegradable confetti is that it's good for the environment. There's not a scrap of plastic in sight and nothing will end up in our waterways, so that is great news for marine sea creatures!

Making your own confetti is cheap, you'll find all the resources in your garden (or a friend or relative's garden if you don't have one) and, best of all, it's free! The only cost is a little bit of your time... and perhaps a hole punch if you don't have one already.

There's a benefit to you too!

If your celebration is outside, there's no need to clean up. The little pieces of hole-punched leaves will simply biodegrade. They'll all be gone a few days later.

Making your own biodegradable confetti is really simple.

Just collect your leaves from outside... have fun and pick different leaves from different places so that you have lots of different types and colours. Now all that's left to do it start hole punching and keep them safe in an envelope, or make a little pot out of an old toilet roll!
